

American Indian and Multicultural Connection

a rhythmic instrument as it moved in dance. Southeastern women used turtle shells strapped to their legs in the shuffle step to add sound to their movement in a Stomp Dance.

Common musical instruments in Eastern Woodland Indian tribes include the water drum, rattles made from gourds or turtle shells, and sticks. The body was also used as